1. The Hollywood Sign is a landmark icon of Los Angeles, but it was first known as the Hollywoodland Sign.
2. Not only did the original letters stand fifty feet tall, but each also lit up at night to draw the eye.
3. Most people associate the sign with the film industry in Hollywood, yet the sign was originally intended to advertise a real-estate development.
4. Whether viewed as a quaint remnant of classic Los Angeles or a contemporary landmark, the sign has become a “must-see” for tourists visiting the area
5. The letters appear straight when viewed from high altitude, but from the ground, the contours of the mountain create an illusion of waviness.
6. The original sign fell into disrepair and was the subject of frequent vandalism, so a campaign to restore it was taken up in 1978.
7. The total cost of restoration was $250,000 and was divided equally amongst nine donors who each restored a single letter of the sign.
8. Rock musician Alice Cooper wished to commemorate his departed friend, the comedian Groucho Marx, so he commissioned one of the “O’s” in his name.
9. Other donors included Hugh Hefner, Gene Autry, and Andy Williams.
10. The only corporate donor was Warner Bros. Records, but, strangely, they did not restore the “W” in the sign but instead the other “O.”
